How Rates Are Computed (For Employers Eligible For a Computed Rate)

Rates for private employers are calculated on a "benefit ratio" system. Rates are calculated in four steps:

1. Selection of the Rate Table

There are eight rate tables each having 21 ranks. Rates vary from 0.000% to 9.000% on table 1 and from 0.000% to 7.000% on table 8. The table in effect for 2024 is Table 8. The table used is decided by a formula that considers:

- the total money available to pay benefits on the rate computation date (07/01/2023)
- the total wages paid by contributory employers in the first four of the five calendar quarters immediately before the rate computation date
- the highest 12 consecutive month benefit cost ratio in the 10 years ending on the computation date

2. Determining Each Employer's Benefit Ratio

Divide the employer's average annual benefits paid for five years before the computation date by their average annual taxable payroll for the same five years.

3. Ranking Employers by Benefit Ratio

Each employers benefit ratio is compared to every other employer.

- List all employers by increasing benefit ratios, from the lowest to the highest.
- Group the employers on the list into 21 ranks, each rank having about 4.76% (1/21) of the total taxable wages reported by the same employers for the four calendar quarters immediately before the computation date.

Note: All employers with the same benefit ratio are given the same rank. Employers with taxable wages that overlap ranks are given the lower of the two ranks.

4. Applying the Rate Table (1) to the Ranking (3)

- Employers whose benefit ratios put them in rank 1 are assigned the rank 1 rate on table 6. Employers whose benefit ratios place them in rank 2 are assigned the rank 2 rate and so forth.
- See section 1 of the Notice of Tax Rate for your rate. The contribution rate in section 1 is the state experience rate as defined on Federal Form 940.
- For 2024, the Reserve Fund Rate is 0.000%.
- For 2024, the Surcharge Rate is 0.000%.

Note: You must file a timely report even if you have a zero rate.
